

Although the Durham Regional Police Service (DRPS) was created through provincial legislation in 1974, our policing heritage dates back to the 1850s.

Covering the largest geographical jurisdiction in the Golden Horseshoe, the DRPS protects citizens from crime and promotes safer communities through an extensive variety of programs and services.

In 2000, the DRPS enhanced its service to citizens and maintained its position as one of the most progressive police services in Ontario.
